

“Advice and counsel that is concise, timely,
on-point and cost-effective.”

Ted Banks Comments on Compliance in Inside Counsel Magazine

On March 2, 2015 Ted Banks wrote in Inside Counsel, Compliance Officers have complicated jobs. They need to manage expectations of government regulators, top-level executives and the rank and file employees. At the same time, a large number of different concerns — from privacy to corruption and more — fall under their purview. As a result, compliance officers must be aware of what is happening in their organizations and in the world, and be agile enough to adjust policies and programs to meet these disparate demands.
